A few “First Class Boutique Guitar Makers” that use Rio Grande Pickups

Zane

Zane Guitars, located in the North Woods of Wisconsin, manufactures handcrafted American made guitars designed for elegance and engineered for perfection, sound and playability. Zane Guitars proudly uses Rio Grande pickups and only the highest quality parts made in the USA

Big Tex

The Mission of Big Tex Guitars is simple: to create new replica vintage guitars at reasonable prices with the look, feel and tone of the beloved pieces from the 50's and 60's - instruments that have become impossible for most players to even dream of owning. Our nitrocellulose finishes are hand rubbed and polished using old-school techniques on the finest cuts of alder, swamp ash and pine. The finishes are purposely applied very thin to replicate a 40 to 50 year old, well-worn finish. This allows the wood to open up and breathe earlier as the guitar is played, recreating the timbre of very old, finished wood.

Kochel

Kochel Guitars are created with reclaimed materials from Montana, combining history and tradition. The body of the guitars are crafted from antique wood salvaged from local buildings, originally erected from old growth timber. The neck of the Kochel guitars are made from various native woods. The fingerboards are reclaimed and shaped by such things as scrub oak pallets and other American hardwoods. Each fret board has spent ammo cartridges as fret markers. The nut is fabricated from the bones of native Montana bison and elk. The saddles are constructed from salvaged barn wood incorporating an antique nail or an old skeleton key. Each box guitar comes as acoustic/electric. In this day and age when most things are discarded and forgotten, Kochel Guitars takes great pride in reusing our resources and preserving the past. These treasured guitars are steeped in history along with an American folk tradition.

Weller Guitars

Steve Weller is a lifelong artist and craftsman. He has a 4 year degree in design and is a 25 year veteran photographer with two great obsessions... guitars and cars. He has spent many years restoring cars and has been playing guitar since 1969. With Weller Guitars, Steve pulls skills from his background to handcraft unique, beautiful custom guitars. Each of Steve's guitars are built by hand, one by one. Each guitar is a labor of love.
